E.T.—We take another look at the supermovie of 1982. Our four pages of scenes from the flick will remind you of some special moments from this special film.

New zoo—The Bronx Zoo has added a new section where kids have a chance to get a little wild.

The Outsiders—Here's a new movie packed with some of Hollywood's best young talent. We introduce you to the movie and its stars. And you'll find a super mini-poster of the cast in the centerfold.

Superfun with S.P.—Have some far-out fun with S.P. (that's short for Space Pal) and this issue's games, mazes, and and jokes.

Superspooofs—Get ready for some chuckles with our comic spoof of TV's favorite sports announcer.

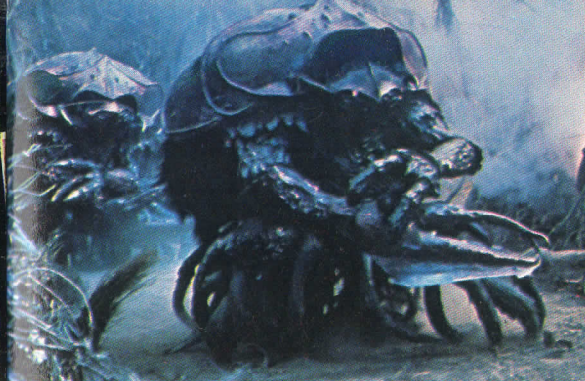

New superflicks—After you read about these two new movies, The Dark Crystal and Never Cry Wolf, we think you'll agree that they are too terrific to miss!

Dark Crystal Five years ago, Jim Henson, creator of The Muppets, dreamed of a movie filled with fantasy creatures and imaginary worlds. After combining puppets, electronics, and models, Henson created The Dark Crystal.

In the film, lizardlike creatures, who live in a dark, decaying castle on a jagged mountain peak, control an ancient society. You're guaranteed to see some outrageous beasts in this tale of mystery and adventure.

Two new movies

Never Cry Wolf

When biologist Tyler Foam, played by Charles Martin Smith, first accepted the job of spending more than six months in Northern Canada studying wolves, he was afraid of the animals. But by the end of the movie, Tyler—and the audience—learn that wolves are special creatures.

Never Cry Wolf brings you some great scenery, along with terrific animal photography.

(Right) You'll change your opinion of this creature after seeing Never Cry Wolf. (Far right) Tyler Foam set up an observation point to watch wolves. It didn't take long before he grew to love the animals.
